"There's no better way to start off your weekend than with a brand new Assassins Creed game." DICE gets the "no better way" declaration out of the way right off the bat and only sets its sights higher, declaring this to be the best possible opening line for any video game show. The Assassin's Creed franchise, which has earned over $3.5 billion worldwide, continues its winning streak into a new generation. Mysteries The first question in the first segment of the day begins with a mystery. A sports jersey-clad moderator is shown asking a young woman on stage, "What number are you?" In a room full of Black Hood and Assassin-themed gadgets and devices, a not-so-secret agent is trying to discover her identity. Of course, the director and producer of the show (it's called "Direct it, Produce it") has the power to reveal her secret. Mysterious gadgets And if you know what's coming, you can guess the answer. The woman's orange number is 1. She's one of many, many Fox Sports employees who are secretly Assassin. So the gang of secret Agents is in a room full of mystery, asking about things they know all of the answers to. At any point, the moderator can whip out a special Assassin Edition controller or phone on stage and ask the audience members for the correct answer. Every time, they're stunned and thrilled to hear the answer, and every time, they're wrong. If you have this controller, you can bet it's your lucky day. The show The rest of the day is filled with a variety of events: a parade; a stage show; a walking tour of downtown with a featured company; a guest appearance by a mix of female and male hosts; a panel discussion with prominent industry leaders; a quick visit to the studio's own Motley Fool Headquarters; and an audience Q&A. The panel The panel looks at the current state of the game, previews upcoming games, talks about the impact of social media and technology, and even takes a very serious look at the realities of the future. The panel starts off talking about the new Assassin's Creed game, but it turns into a talk with a wide variety of industry leaders from across the game industry. They discuss the latest trends in technology, how to balance innovation and quality with the need to keep up with technology, and who would win in a video game fight bff6bb2d33
