The clients that are authenticated are a combination of ours and 3rd parties. Our controller's only post to "api" path is to a dummy function that does an instanceof and redirects to a GET method of a view that uses a partial view. We cache that partial view in the client to reduce calls back to the server so, we know what the rendered page would look like if we didn't cache. Now, we would like to render a different partial view based on the fact if it's a logged in client (or possibly a client that has a certain role set) but we don't have a way to set an authenticated user. What's a good way to get the logged in client's ID from within the controller that's rendering the view? A: If you are using cookies then you can check the authentication cookies to verify the user is logged in, something like this would work for authentication. (MVC 5) if

(Request.Cookies["LoggedIn"] != null) { // user is logged in. } else { // otherwise the user is not logged in. }

If you are not using cookies (i.e. native web api) then you can use this approach to determine which users are logged in and which are not.

var user = new UserManager(new UserStore(new ApplicationDbContext())); user.FindByIdAsync(id).Wait();
var isLoggedIn = user.IsInRole(Constants.Administrators.ToString());

In the cutting of threads in cylindrical workpieces it is known to use a rotating tool with a plurality of cutting blades or teeth that are caused to engage the workpiece while the workpiece is rotated. Typically, the cutting blades are mounted on a so-called "drilling mandrel" which is rotated relative to the workpiece so that the cutting blades engage the workpiece and remove material as the teeth cut into the workpiece. Examples of such tools are shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,419,539, issued

A very common question from the movie buffs is what.Q: how to log splunk data inside a file and name of that file using elasticsearch im working on elasticsearch, logstash, kibana, rkt and kubernetes i cant found a way to store splunk data in a file and to name that file. currently i'm using filebeat and kibana. this is my logstash configuration i named it log-filebeat and this is how i configured it. input { logstash { # port => 5959 # Read syslog from multiple hosts hosts => ["syslog-1.example.com",

"syslog-2.example.com"] # The Syslog input is a wrapper around multiple inputs. Use # for just one input type => "syslog" # Set syslog tags at or above the input level tags => ["host", "myhost"] # Replace the syslog field with the Hostname # The User field can be left blank fields => ["user@myhost.com", "syslog_pri",
  "Hostname", "message", "pid", "program",
  "program_version", "syslog_severity",
  "timestamp", "time"] } output { elasticsearch { hosts => ["localhost:9200"] index => "logstash" protocol => "http" } } my output in kibana looks like this: this is how i configured filebeat to run at specific intervals with splunk - beats.hosts:
  ['localhost'] beats.ports: [5959] e79caf774b
